The experience of the Rev. Dr. Charles Burroughs as a missionary is told by the Hartford Churchman. Mr. Burroughs, who was the pastor of a Portsmouth church, spent a summer vacation on the Isle of Shoals. There he found a dilapidated, longunused church, which he repaired at his own expense, and occupied every Sunday during his stay. He worked hard on weekdays, too, in the spiritual interest of the people. After his fare well discourse he had just pushed out in a sail-boat that was to carry him home when a man ran hallooing over the bill. The clergyman disembarked to meet the messenger, whose errand was to present a bill for the use of the church. The congregation had by a vote, after the sermon, fixed upon what they regarded as a moderate price. The bill was paid, and the missionary never returned to his labors in that neighborhood.

THE COLOR OF THE SEA .- The Mediterranean is noted for its bright and deep blue color when undisturbed, though probably it does not differ much from the ocean in that respect. Professor Tyndall attributes this tint to minute particles in suspension, the existence of which he proved by optical experiment. Carpenter found by filtration that these particles were inorganic, and much more abundant than in the Atlantic. According to Admiral Smyth, a greenish tinge is prevalent in the Adriatic: it borders on purple in the Levant Basin, while the Black Sea often has the dark aspect from which it derives its name. - Appletons' American Cyclopædia, revised edition, article 'Mediterranean Sea."
